BOUND AND ROBBED.

BURGLARS' BOLD WORK ON THURSDAY NIGHT.

They Enter a House on Valley Street, Chloroform an Inmate and Stole $20 From the Bureau Drawer—No Crawl.

Burglars entered the home of William Terrell, a mulatto living on Valley street, on Thursday night, bound and chloroformed Mrs. Terrell and stole twenty dollars from a bureau drawer and escaped. A reward has been offered for their capture, but as yet there is no clue.

Terrell makes his living playing for in-lanes and on Thursday night he left to play at the Glen Rock. The door was left open for him and his wife was sleeping on the sofa. At about 10 o'clock she heard a step on the stair and a minute later a man entered. Supposing it was her husband she rose to greet him and said:

"Is that you Will?"

"No, it is not Will," gruffly replied the stranger. He stepped in the door and was followed by another.

The two advanced to her, one holding a knife, the other a revolver in his hand, and warned her not to make an outcry.

"We have come for that money you have here," said one of the men.

"There is no money in the house," replied the woman.

A minute later she was grabbed and a handkerchief saturated with chloroform was placed over her nose and she soon became insensible.

When she awoke it was six o'clock in the morning and she was lying bound and gagged in front of the fireplace and at her side was a lamp still burning. Although weak from fright and exhaustion she managed to take the chimney off, and held her hands over the flame until the cords were separated. She then untied the knot at her feet and managed to again reach the sofa.

Her husband did not return until 7 o'clock. He had played until late and remained with a friend, but when he did return he found his wife in a highly dejected condition and the room littered with the contents of the drawers of the bureau and $20 missing. Mrs. Terrell was since been confined to her bed. Her throat was marked where she had been grabbed by one of the burglars.

The two men wore masks; one was about six feet high and of large build and the other was several inches smaller. He is thought to be a white man and the other a negro.

It is thought by Terrell that the robbery was committed by some persons familiar with the house and knew that there was money in it. A gold watch and some jewelry was not touched.

NOT MUCH BUSINESS.

What Occupied the City Council Last Night.

There was not a large amount of important business before the Board of Aldermen last night.

Mr. Richmond Pearson was present and made the city another offer which was considered very favorably, but not accepted. It was to give the city $10,000 for the property where the old jail building now stands, and in addition to that to donate to the city, double the amount of ground on the eminence on Eagle street, provided they would erect the city hall and market house there.

Mr. Pearson said that the present city lot was too small to accommodate all the traffic which the market house would render necessary. Action on this matter was deferred till the next meeting in order to allow the members of the board to consider the advisability of accepting the offer.

It was ordered that the owners of all public drays be required, when they get their dray license from Tax Collector Reynolds, to get a number and the date of issue and put in a conspicuous place on both sides of their wagon.

Aldermen Miller and Fitzpatrick reported from the committee that was appointed to investigate the matter of laying new water mains on Hill street. They recommended that the street be laid with ten inch pipes for a distance of 600 feet. The committee was authorized to contract for the work.

Mr. R. M. Furman appeared before the board and asked that a plank walk be put down on the east side of Pine street, from College to Chestnut. The board ordered it to be done.

On motion of Alderman Pulliam, a committee composed of the Mayor, J. H. McDowell and H. C. Fagg was appointed to purchase a new pair of horses for the use of the horse company.

A communication from Mr. T. C. H. Dukes asking that the name of Duke street be changed back to Short street, was read, and the name was changed.

On presenting a certificate from a physician, stating that he was physically disabled and not able to pay his taxes, J. S. Gillam was made exempt from city tax.

TO PRACTICE ELOCUTION.

The Reason Some Frequent the Meetings.

Mr. T. C. H. Dukes gently scored a number of Ashevilleans in his petition to the Board of Aldermen last night. The document was as follows:

To His Honor the Mayor and the Honorable the Aldermen of City of Asheville, N. C.:

Gentlemen—I would appear before your honorable body in person and urge my request, but have been for years aware that your valuable time is generally taken up Friday evenings by parties who seem to frequent your meetings to practice elocution, have some one to grin at, or have some disinterested advice to give, gratis, which, if followed, would certainly benefit the city at large and themselves in particular. I simply wish to ask you to order that the name of Duke street be changed back to its original name (Short street), or that you give the street some other name, say Northumberland avenue, Hickory Lane, or whatever name may meet the taste of your body.

The name, Duke street, is distasteful to me, and was petitioned for by parties who, although they may have considered it a compliment, failed at least to meet my approval. By granting this request you will much oblige your obedient servant.

T. C. H. DUKES.

GOSSIP OF THE DAY.

If you go into the excellent gymnasium of the Y. M. C. A. in this city on any pleasant morning, you are quite likely to find two or three men earnestly engaged in taking exercise with certain of the lighter furnishings of the room. This in itself is a most admirable scheme, but it strikes a spectator that some of the men whom he sees there develop themselves in a way that is not good for their mental makeup, even if their physique is improved. The men referred to are very evidently here for their health, but they steadily decline to allow themselves to forget that fact for a moment.

They try the pulley weights, first with one arm, then with the other, and lastly with both together. While they are doing it all they keep account of the number of strokes taken with each weight and arm, and when they get through with a certain amount of exercise on the weights they turn their attention to the rowing machine and to swinging a pair of light Indian clubs or hoisting couple of dumb bells a few times. All this would be very good if taken in the right spirit; but there could have been men whose work in the way of gymnastics could on some mornings have benefited them very little, they comment at these times on the fact that the work fatigues them more than it did on some previous days; they find something in this to grow very gloomy and despondent over, and they leave the gymnasium sometimes in a very melancholy mood indeed, telling themselves and their friends that they must be losing ground, that Asheville isn't capable of doing them any more good, and that they might just as well go home at once and have it over with. If they are in a particularly solemn mood they are likely to trot off to the nearest scales to weigh themselves; and if they've lost a pound of flesh since they last recorded their weight that settles it for them. They immediately begin to take an interest in mortuary matters and take a melancholy pleasure in conjuring up visions of a church, a procession of mourners passing under a plumed vehicle and black horses, and all the rest of the dismal picture.

It requires no doctor's skill to tell these people that the manner in which they only take their pleasures is not a way that will ever lead them out of the wilderness into possession of robust health. The average man in Asheville doesn't know how to be sick and get well again. He hopes and pines and keeps himself in a continual state of doubt regarding his condition that must have a retarding effect upon his physical improvement. The men who thoroughly understand the science of being gracefully retired from the midst of affairs, and who recover most quickly and thoroughly or, at worst, hold their own with the greatest steadiness and tenacity of purpose, are the men who use common prudence but otherwise forget that they are or ever have been on the invalid list. These fellows ride a little, perhaps, or live, walk, keep up such of their amusements as are within their reach, retain their interest in the affairs of this mundane sphere, and generally b. have like citizens of the world who haven't any expectation of quitting this life till they have to respond to the call. They don't cross a bridge till they come to it, and generally this wise class don't come to the bridge till long after the nervous self-inspecting crowd have deliberately and carefully worried themselves over it.

The average woman who is sick can discount a man at the game and then beat him. She has more sense when it comes to a question of laying up on the retired list and waiting before rejoining the procession; and when it comes to a matter of endurance she has more pluck and nerve. If you don't believe it compare the behavior of members of the sexes when it comes to a little matter of going to the dentist's. A man will wait till a tooth drives him frantic, makes him lose the friendship of half his acquaintances and transforms him into a howling maniac; then he fortifies himself by a visit to his friend at the sign of the free lunch counter, rushes in disheveled haste to the tooth puller's office, undergoes the operation, wraps up the extracted molar and poses before his friends as a hero. A woman duly makes an appointment, makes a careful toilet, waits for a street car or her carriage, stops on the way to do some shopping that she "positively must not forget," discusses the weather with the artist for seven minutes before entering the torture chair, and then lets the doctor cajole her into saving the tooth and allows him to work with it for two mortal hours. Then she smilingly goes home to prepare to fulfill an evening's engagement, does so with her jaw keeping her in torments, and thus winds up a day that would make a wreck of a man for a week and drive him to dark thoughts of suicide.

FRANKLIN NEWS.

An Industrial School and a Building Boom.

FRANKLIN, N. C., March 22, '90.

Asheville Citizen—A building spirit seems to have come upon us. A Mrs. Dean has just built and occupied a residence near the Baptist church.

On the Murphy road a mile and a half from the court house an industrial school for negroes is about to be built. It will be under the auspices of the Episcopal church. The workshop has been built, the teacher's house is nearly complete, the old rail fence has been torn away and replaced by a plank and wire fence, and other preparations made for opening the school. The workshop has been built, the teacher's house is nearly complete, the old rail fence has been torn away and replaced by a plank and wire fence, and other preparations made for opening the school. The workshop has been built, the teacher's house is nearly complete, the old rail fence has been torn away and replaced by a plank and wire fence, and other preparations made for opening the school.

Our much needed hotel is yet a thing of the future. Times are so hard and money so scarce that all feel unable to bear the expense of the building and furnishing. Although we know that it would add greatly to our business, if some enterprising man with the cash would only come to the fore we could fit him up with a full stock of possibilities.

D. Cunningham lost his famous Clydesdale stallion a few days ago. The poor fellow drank too much water, and as a result his bones will soon bleach on some hillside.

There is some probability that we shall this summer have a daily hack line to the falls.
